Department of Community and Regional Planning Spring 2010 Online Courses

The Department of Community and Regional Planning at Iowa State University will offer the following courses online during spring semester 2010.

Each class may be taken for three graduate credits. All are eligible electives that may be applied toward the online Community Development Master's Degree Program offered through the Great Plains Interactive Distance Education Alliance. They are also an excellent professional development opportunity for anyone working in regional, state or local government, nonprofit organizations, and others. Working professionals can learn independently from a location that is more convenient to them.

Register by 5 p.m. Friday, December 28, 2009. Spring semester begins January 11 and ends May 7, 2010.

CRP 517 Urban Revitalization

Monday-Wednesday-Friday

Explore planning methods available to further revitalization and preservation efforts, with particular attention to housing and neighborhoods. Examine the relationship between neighborhood change and urban development process, as well as public policy implications.

CRP 529 International Planning

Tuesday-Thursday

Introduction to issues in planning and governance in an international setting. Problems and strategies may include population movement and change, economic globalization, urban growth, rural development, and housing.
